THE KNOXVILLE WHIG. Knoxville, Tennessee, July 26, 1865. To the Voters of the Second Congressional District, Composed of the Counties of Claiborne, Campbe Anderson, Scott, Morgan Roane, Union, Knox, Blount, Monroe, McMinn, Polk and Bradley.

In compliance with the wishes of many of my Fellow-Citizens of the Second Congressional District, I take this occasion of announcing myself a candidate to represent you in the next Congress of the United

As the present juncture and the novel and embarrasing condition of public affairs demand in our national councils the services of our wisest and best men and the exercise of the very highest order of statesis with extreme diffidence I consent, if the people will, to serve them at a time and in a capacity requiring a far higher degree of wisdom and experience than I possess.—

None, however, if I should be so favored

None, however, if I should be so favored by the confidence of the people, will bring to the discharge of their official duties a more untiring zeal and energy or a more sincere desire to promote the best interests CONTAINING ABOUT 1,000 ACRES of the country.

I have been a citizen of your State for a period of more than fifty years, during a great portion of which time I have been actively engaged in public life, and, to some extent, interested in the leading political and social movements of the day. The people in the past have favored me with positions of honor and responsibility, and I have been a citizen of your State for a positions of honor and responsibility, and warded the public confidence.

My record for the last four years, during the troublous times through which we have passed, is well known, I presume, to most of my fellow-citizens of the district, and requires but little comment from myself. I am, I have ever been an unyielding friend of the Union of States, and opposed to all efforts and schemes to destroy their integrity. I have labored ever since I attained to man's estate, and especially during the last several years, for the preservation of the American Union and the perpetuatio of republican institutions. I have lamented the perilous exigences which lately threatened the Government, and hailed with unmeasured gratification the recent happy and glorious termination of our military straggles. Though the rebellion has been sup pressed and no armed resistance exists any where within our borders, all our hopes are not yet consummated-we have other and perhaps more embarrassing difficulties, before us. Order must be brought out of confusion-the National wounds must be healed-the rude measures of war must give place to the more refining and ameliorating condition of the country-the country itself cemented in "a more perfect Union," and the Republic re-established on more enduring foundations than ever. Now that the government has been rescued from the terrible fate to which the rebellion, if successful, would have consigned it, it is necessary to see that the common prosperity and the liberties of the people are also preserved.

Every agency that will contribute to these results is needed; and it will become your representatives to be active and vigilant and alive to the destiny before us as a people. As a Nation, we have illustrated our military strength-it is right and necessary that we now exhibit our political wisdom. For this purpose if elected as your representative. I will give my hearty support to the conservative policy of the Government as already foreshadowed in the measures of President Johnson's administration, in the great work of pacifying the country and restoring it to its former career of prosperity and happiness.

It will also be my desire and determination to look well to the personal and pecuniary interests of my constituents; and to do all within my power to secure to them the full measure of indemnity and pensation to which they may be entitled reason of the consumption of their provisions, and the use and destruction of their and occupied by A.
